

Cable companies should be monitored more closely on high speed data. If they are going to continue to get favoritism by the government over other broadband alternatives they should be regulated to provide consistent service without the disconnects and service slowdowns caused by running too many users on one node. If consumers are going to be forced to pay to get high speed from cable due to no other options in area then they should be getting what they pay for.